To answer these error messages, Google Sheets also offers error handling functions such as IFERROR, IFNA, etc., for example, if you use a text parameter in a function which only accepts numbers, the function will return a #Value error. So, if you get a #ref! Error or a #Value error, the returned amount is always the same. It is returned when a function is trying to access a calama that can not be accessed. The error code is usually returned when there is a problem with the syntax of a formula. We hope you have found this tutorial. Syntax for IFERROR in Google Leaves The syntax for the IFERROR function is the following: IFERROR (TEST VALUE, [VALUE, IF_ERROR]) Here, test value is the value, cell reference or graphic that is being tested for error. However, the disadvantage is that this function does not differ between the different error messages and treats them in the same way. This type of error can occur in the following cases: You may have forgotten to add an important operator between values in your graphic that you can have an uneven number of opening brackets and closing in your graphic that you may have started your text with a signal the same (Á € á € " = á €"), although you did not want to use a fan. In this way, the subsequent holes using these results will not be affected, as shown below: Everything we did was use the IFERROR function with our main trick in the first parameter. This type of error usually occurs when you use search functions such as Vlookup or Hlookup. A division by 0 does not make a mathematical sense and can make the computer system instable. Returning a blank space in case of division by zero error when you perform mathematical chases with your data, especially when there is a division involved, there is always a possibility of a division for error zero. The division by 0 does not make mathematical sense, therefore the leaves Google prevents this computation from being carried out, thus returning the error code. Here here some of the error codes returned by Google sheets in case of an error: Error #na simply puts, # n / a error means that a specific value is "not available". The film in the second line also returns the value in A3, since there is no error code in its referenced cell. = IFERROR (A2 / (B2-C2)) We could put a blank space in the second parameter, but this is unnecessary because the second parameter is considered a blank space, less that something else is specified. We will explain the syntax of this function, what it does and how it can be applied in different cases of use. When you perform operations on the data, there is almost always a possibility of errors. This is because we are trying to divide by the difference between the values in the B4 and C4 cells, which is 0. The function IFERROR is built to respond to all the above errors. For example, take a look at the image shown below: The Formula on the first line simply returns the value in A2, since there is no error code in its referenced calamus. In our case, we just want to say "Value not found", so we specify this in the second parameter of the IFerror function, as follows: You can also use IFERROR with the function Query to take care of # n / an error in the same way. As such, it can be quite useful in various situations in which we expect a provable error that occurs. Whenever you wrap a formula with the IFerror function, it maintains a lookup for one or more of the above errors. VALUE IF ERROR is the value that needs to be returned if the first parameter returns an error. This is also causing an error in the final sum (in the CÁ @ Lula E6). This means, your fans must be: = IFerror (ArrayFormula (A2: A5 / B2: B5)) This made the function IFERROR if you apply to all values of the returned array. # Div / 0! Error Div / 0! The error code is returned when a fan is trying to split a number 0.
